

Attendance Service

Information for parents and carers

Why is attending school important?

Good school attendance gives your child the opportunity of success and helps develop skills for life. Your child should attend school every day unless there is an unavoidable cause such as illness. Missing school can be damaging to your child's learning, social development, and life opportunities.

Children who miss many days from school fall behind their peers, and struggle to catch up.

A child who misses school just twice per month will lose out on 18 days' education across the school year – that's nearly four weeks.

Most of the work missed through absence is never made up, which can lead to big gaps in learning.

Friendships can also be affected by persistent absence. It can be hard for a child who misses lots of school to form and maintain relationships with their classmates.

What counts as good attendance?

An attendance rate of 95% is generally considered good; this allows for children to miss 9.5 days across the school year. Persistent absence (PA) is defined as an attendance rate of 90% or below and severe absence (SA) is an attendance rate of 50% or below.

How is school attendance calculated?

Schools count each school day as two sessions, one morning and one afternoon, making a total of 10 sessions over a full school week.

What to do if your child is unwell

All children will have days when they are too unwell to go to school. Parents should obtain the school attendance policy and follow the absence reporting process applicable to the school.

If your child is too ill to go to school, you must telephone the school on the morning of the first day of absence. You must provide a reason for absence and expected date of return to school.

If the school disputes the authenticity of their illness, or if your child's attendance to school is deemed persistent or severe, they could ask you to provide medical information to help them understand your child's health difficulties and, where necessary, work with health professionals to make any adjustments necessary to help your child attend school as much as possible whilst receiving medical treatment. If your child is not able to attend school at all because of their health, medical information should be provided to the school by the health professional supporting your child. This will help establish whether your child may require alternative education until they are well enough to return to school. It is parental responsibility to obtain and provide the information to the school. If you have any difficulties obtaining medical information, speak to your school who may be able to contact your GP on your behalf.

MATTER,
ATTENDANCE COUNTS.

What happens when attendance does not improve?

As a parent, it's your responsibility to make sure your child attends school.

If your child doesn't go to school and you haven't phoned in your notification, you'll be contacted by the school to find out why they are absent. The school will offer opportunity to meet with you to discuss any difficulties and to offer you support.

If your child remains persistently or severely absent, following the meeting with the school, you may be referred to the council's attendance service.

Attendance and the Law

Parents/carers commit an offence if a child does not attend school regularly and the absence is not agreed by the school (i.e. the absence is unauthorised).

Section 7 of the Education Act 1996 places a duty on parents to ensure that their child of compulsory school age receives a suitable education, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.

A pupil's unauthorised absence from school could result in one of the following:

Penalty Notice: penalty notices may be issued to address absence including holidays taken during term time. The penalty is £80 payable (per parent, per child) within 21 days, rising to £160 if paid between 22 and 28 days. When a second penalty notice is imposed within a 3-year period, the fine is £160 (per parent, per child) A Penalty Notice is an alternative to prosecution; it does not require a court appearance, but still aims to improve school attendance. Failure to pay may result in prosecution.

Prosecution: under Section 444 of the Education Act 1996. Prosecution could result in a criminal record and fines up to £2500 and/or 3 months imprisonment. A range of other outcomes are also available such as Parenting Orders or Community Sentences.

The Lewisham Council Attendance Service has statutory responsibilities for school attendance, children missing education, child employment and performance and legal prosecution.

In the UK, education is compulsory for every child between the ages of 5-16 and they must remain in education or training until they are 18.

When a child's attendance does not improve despite support and intervention provided by the school, a referral may be made to the Lewisham Attendance Service for statutory action. This will include:

- The parent or carer will receive a court warning letter.
- An attendance panel meeting will be arranged as a final opportunity to address and support parents and the school to improve attendance.
- A parenting contract will be drawn up. This is a voluntary written agreement stating that the parent or carer will work with the council and school to improve the child's attendance.
- If attendance does not improve, legal action will be considered.
